MUSIC.

A DOUBLE BILL AT THE OPERA. Gluck's "Orfer" and Mascagni's "Cavalleria Rus-icana" were per med at the Metropolitan Opera House just night, both in Italian, with the usual brass traditional on the Italian stage. Conserning the first opera it may be said without the slightest hesitation that had the German composer who set the fashion in dramatic composition for the French stage seen it, be would assuredly not have recognized he heard it, he would have wondered what had te over the antit of the score. Its dress was a nost absurd jumble of classic, pagnn and medineval Christian notions. The Greek underworld was repre sented by the Hell of Asrael. with nscending smoke of torment, and instead of Ixion, Tantalus, Sisyphus nd the other mythological heroes of Hades, whose labors were susended when the music of Orpheus enriched the ataosphere of their prisonhouse, we saw the red devils of mediaeval fancy. The Eiysian Fields were the magic gardens of Merlin, with their tropical forest vegetation. sea in the background and gold-winged Cherubim and Seraphim to keep company with the Eurydice and her associates of empsichorean proclivities. The danc-ing in Hades, as well as in the Elysian Fields, was a trifle disturbing to classic ideas, but for this the fault lay as much with Gluck and the stage conventions of his time as with the dancing master of the Metropolitan company. The argument which the dancer Vestris made when he persuaded Gluck to forego his objections and put a gavotte in one of his Iphigenias was unanswerable then, and if we want to hear Gluck's operas we must take them with all their anachronisms. "But Agameinnon never danced a gavotte," said Gluck.
"So much the worse for Agamemnon," retorted Vestris, and the King of Men had to step it in the style of the gallants of the French Court.

The revival of "Orico" was due to the reputation made by the London newspapers for the sisters Giulin and Sofia Ravogli, respectively the Orpheus and Eurodice of the drama. On what the extraordinary ruse of these two singers, especially to the conwas based it would be idle to attempt to discover after last night's performance. Everything that was do e by them last night only tended to set one to wondering what must be the stundard of judgment in a city where such voices and ach vocalization could be lauded as evcellent. There are good tones in the nce of Miss Giulia Ravogli, but they are outnumbered the vice of her style, and the pleasure which they might give is a red by her continual posturing and uninterrupted consciousness. As for the lower register of he v ce, it is utterly undeveloped, and when she frees it in simulation of dramatic intensity the renders it harsh, disagreeable and vulgar. Her singing of the interpolated florid air at the close of act was hopclessly and amazingly badng her actistic luture.

How utterly foreign the modern dramatic spirit is the average Italian opera troupe was abundantly lustrated in the rformance of Mascagni's hot-It makes no difference whether or ot the work emb tying that spirit be given on German, French, or a ... soil. Verdi's "Otello" was treated with as little respect by Mr. Abbey's last company as Mascagni's "Cava leria Rusticana" was last night, yet both an ganhan products. A single instance may be cited to illustrate what is meant. The open opens on Easter morning with a grahering of illagers in front of the village The instrumental prelude, made up in the familiar over tre style out of melodic material drawn opera, is rupled by a Siciliano sung be Turridu to Lola. The instrumental prelude is then resamed and h might to an impressive close. Last night the music was stopped when the Siciliano was reach d, to permit the curtain to be raised on a dark stage. The tenor, Valero, with a high and somewhat striculous voice, and strange theories of phrasing, sang his song hidden behind a house. The song was applauded. The singer promptly discovered himself, and howed his thanks over the footlights. Then he graciously concealed himself again and repeated the song. After he had come forward a second till e, Signor Vianesi found the place in his soor and resumed the overture. Meanwhile the lights were gradually turned up to suggest the coming of morning, and the stage was left open and empty. Of course, the composer's intuition and the dramatic allusion were both outraged. Poor Mascagni! He is suffering the fate of the proverbial prophet. Miss Eamos was the Santazza of the opera and sang and acted the part admirably. On Friday night "Le Prophete" will be sung in French.

se, the composer's intuition and the dramatic aluser both outraged. Poor Mascagni! He is of New-York and Hyde-Park-on-Hudson, on Monday at the fate of the proverbial prophet. Miss se was the Santuzza of the opera and sang and it the part admirably. On Friday night "Le thete" will be sung in French.

"THE LION TAMER."

"The operation of the bride's parents, No. 739 Lexington.

"The loud of h Theatregoers are in the habit of attending the comic to be r the particular opera presented as to see Mr. Wilson, with his comicality of limb and visage, and odali" was pulled and patched and worried into a noderate success. Never since these two people wandered away from the C. sino have they found so favorable a set of surroundings in which to present themselves to their friends as they have now discovered in

'ast night. There is nothing for anybody to do in the new opera except what is done by Mr. Wilson and Miss Jansen. The latter does perhaps rather the more of the two. Mr. Wilson received a welcome that should go beyond all his expectatio -, for he must be insufferably vain if he expected anything of the kind. To be sure his entrance was a happy one, and there was something irrest tibly mirth-provoking in his opening trio with the two little negroes who have so long figured in "The Merry Monarch." and who now appear as ' Bounding Brothers of Earbary." He had further opportunity for the pantomimic fun in which he is so thoroughly expert, in the scene in which the news of his supposed death is brought to the circus company and to his wife, who knows well his horror of death in general and of drowning in particular, while he watches all the crocodile tears through the curtains of the dressing-tent.

Miss Jansen always bubbles with mirth and she has seldom, if ever, had a part that was more exactly cut and fitted and trimmed for her needs. There is a little dramatic element in it, too, which she is elever and quick to grasp. The lion-tamer, her busband, does not appreciate her, any more than she appreciates him, till they are separated, and then she hunts the world for him, while nothing but blunderousses will make him forget her. The eleverest scene of the opera is that in which the llon-tamer and his wife rehearse the exhibitions of sorrow that she is to give when she is fold that he is drowned. Her sorrow is more than half real, but she is too much of a coquette to confess it to him. With these partly bidden depth of true womanhood, such as are not the dash and brilliancy that may be supposed to the dash and brilliancy that may be supposed to belong to a circus rider who delights in her skill in the ring and revels in the admiration that it brings She scorns all her adorers and hurries them about in the most unmerciful way, but she would no

A warm welcome was also given to Miss Laure Moore, who sang a pretty song effectively at the be ginning of the second act, and Miss Nettie Lyford had another. Charles Plunker was also a general favorite William Pruetic appeared for the first time with the company. He sang well, but his acting wanted interest company. He sang well, but his acting wanted interest on his own part, and therefore failed to excite it in anybody else. He delivered himself of such soldier-like oaths as "Broadswords and bombshells!" "Horse-pistols and hand-grenades!" and "Ramrods and rapiers!" all of which somehow had a familier sound, quite as if he were saying "prunes The chorns deserves credit for genuine vigor and energy of voice and action. So also Signor de Novellis as the director of the music.

"The Lion Tamer" is drawn from a French origina by Jules Preval and Albert de Saint-Albin, and the present version has words by J. Cheever Goodwin and music by Richard Stahl. Mr. Goodwin had a good opera story ready to his hand, and all he needed to do was to struggle not to spoil it. A book could be imagined freer from expressions and allusions that draw the attention away from time and the place of the story the time and the place of the story than Mr. Goodwin's is, but it is as good as anything that he has done and better than much that this public has suffered. The words of the songs are even bright at times and almost always mean something, and that should be a cause of genuine gratitude. There is nothing about Mr. Stahl's music to draw especial strention to it. No attempt has been made to originate anything, but all is in keeping with the occasion and there is nothing diresome or offensive.

An atmosphere of the circus seems to have settled of late over the New York theatres. Here it has an effect of breez-life, and it gives a novelty to the scenes and songs of comic opera, which are too much confined to the royal polaces of nameless East Indian kingdoms. The production of "The Lion Tamer" is rich, and the stage pictures delight the eye. The dressing tent of a circus is shown in the first act, and a rnined chapel by moonlight and a well-constructed street in the second. The costumes also are exceedingly handsome.

It would seem to most people that after the number of years the Oratorio society have sung Handel's "Messiah" under the same director, by last night at the second evening concert of the society in the Music Heil that in the singing of many of the choruses there was room for improvement. The chorus "And With His Stripes" was poorly and carelessly sung. Most of the choruses began well, but as they went on, and especially in several of the long fugues, the singing of the chorus became lifeless and careless. The "Hallelujah Chorus" was well sung and so were the choruses "All We Like Sheep" and

"Worthy is the Lamb."

Miss Clementine De Vere was not in as good voice as usual, and her singing was lacking in feeling and was marred by a pronounced tremolo. Her best aria was, "I Know that my Redeemer Liveth," in which she took the place of Mrs. Patrick Walker, who is sick with the grip.

Madame Ritter-Goeize drew forth deserved applause for her beautiful singing of "He Was Despised." Fischer, however, was the star of the evening, and his superb execution of "Why Do the Nations?" and "For

Signor Campanini was in poor voice, but he sang with much religious feeling.

The orchestra was good. The organist was Frank L.
Sealey, who has been the society's accompanist for years. The house was packed, and, as many who desired to attend were unable to procure seats, there will be an extra concert of the oratorio te-night in Music Hall at popular prices.

THE YOUNG PEOPLE'S CONCERT

Another is added to the several enterprises already established in New-York for the popularizing of good music, in the series of Young People's Concerts, under Mr. Walter Damrosch's direction. The first of them was given yesterday afternoon in the Music Hall. In the audience it was pleasant to observe a large proportion of those for whom these concerts are especially designed. The programmes are to be selected with the avowed purpose of appealing directly to the tastes of younger listeners, with music of the highest character, and yesterday's was excellently devised with this end in view. The two soloisis were both children them-selves—little Miss Miriam O'Leary. who played the rondo from Chopin's E minor executo, and Master Fledemann, who was heard in Vieuxtemps's Fantasie Caprice for violin; subsequently they were heard to-Krentzer's sonata. Their performances gave an obvious pleasure to both their younger and elder hearers. The orchestral selections included an arrangement of one of Sohubert's "Marches Militaires," an andante from a Haydn symphony; a Bach gavotte; Berllor's "Dans des Syphes," and Strauss's "Koenigsleider" waitzes. From the interest with which these selections were listened to, the young people's series of concerts seemed to have found a place ready to be filled.

THE SCRAMBLE IN KANSAS TO SECURE THE SEAT OF SENATOR PLUMB. Kansas City. Mo., Dec. 30 .- A dispatch to "The Star" from Topeka, Kan, sags: "The struggle for the appointment to the seat in the United states Senate made vacant by the death of senator Phimb has de-veloped into a scramble. Each candidate has established headquarters and maintains them much as if there was a whole Legislature to work upon instead of one poor Governor. The various candidates hold conferences, errange trades, make and receive promises much after the fashion of a hot political election. The Governor now says he made a mistake in offering each man the opportunity of stating his claim to him. He ought, he says 10 have made the appointment before the candidates had the opportunity to organize their forces and contest the appointment so bitterly. Farmers' Alliance, through the chairman of its Ex-ecutive Committee, sent a written demand to the Governor this morning that he call an extra session of the Legislature to choose a successor to Senator Plumb The fact that the present Legislature is controlled by the Farmers' Alliance, and that Governor Humphrey is a Republican, places an extra session out of the ques-

Chicago, Dec. 30,-Thomas Grief to-day finally car ried out his threat of suing Police Captain Mahoney and Inspector Lewis for $25,000 damages. The suit is based on the raid the police made a few weeks ago on Grief's Hall, in searching for Anarchists. In the excitement doors were forcibly opened, and flags and other property destroyed. Chief of Police McCloughey paid all bills presented for the damage done, but Grief takes the position that the police inter-ference was malicious and without warrant. He holds that the trespass resulted in the death of his daughter, who was lying in bed seriously ill at the time.

BERKELEY ATHLETES MAKE DENIALS.

The alleged troubles in the Berkeley Athletic Club recently published have caused a storm of protests from the club. C. F. Methewson, president of the Metropolitan Association of the Amateur Athletic Union, said yesterday:

"It having been suggested to me that the appearance of my name as one of the incorporators of the University Athletic Club, and my declination of official place for the coming year in the Berkeley Athletic Club, have in connection with comments of the press upon these masses been constructed as evidence of a hostile spirit toward the latter club, I desire in justice to say that any such construction is wholly unfounded and erroneous. As to the two clubs in question, I have believed, and still believe, that there is room for both, and that their lines are so different that there need be no substantial clashing.

different that there need be no substantial clashing.

"As to my retirement from official connection with the Berkeley, it also is entirely devoid of significance. In fact, months before the University Athletic Club was incorporated, I informed members of the present Board of Governors of the Berkeley and others concerned that, on account of imperative business and personal reasons, having no element of opposition in them, I must positively decline to serve further. The list of officers which has been made up for the ensuing year is a most competent one. I trust that this will correct all misconceptions upon the above points, and I may add that Henry Stanford Brooks, the only other incorporator of the University Athletic Club who is also an officer of the Berkeley, suthorizes me to say that the above coincides with his sentiments also." Club who is also an officer of the Berkeley, suthorizes me to say that the above coincides with his sentiments also."

C. A. Reed, secretary of the Berkeley Athletic Association, as well as the Berkeley Athletic Club, is indignant at the charges made that he has been working against John S. White and others. He said yesterlay that there was no truth in the report.

"STARTER" CALDWELL SIGNS A CONTRACT. That the Hudson County Jockey Club does not intend to be exterminated without a stubborn fight was demonstrated last night at a meeting of the club, which was held at the Hotel Kensington, Fifth-ave, and Fitteenthst. The chief object of the meeting was to compel "Starter" Caldwell to take sides in the bitter fight that is now or" Caldwell to take sides in the bitter fight that is now being waged by the Board of Control on one side and the Guttenburg people on the other. Mr. Caldwell had said that he would stand by the Board of Control, but last night he agreed to give the Guttenburg people his exclusive services for 1892 and 1893 for $25,000 a year. A similar contract was made and duly signed with the Saratoga Racing Association.

This will not be such a blow to the Board of Control at would have leen some years ago, when Mr. Caldwell as it would have teen some years ago, when Mr. Caldwell had a practical monopoly of the business. At present James Rowe is in the field, and an able rival of Mr. Caldwell he is. Rowe is well fitted by nature and prac-tice for the peculiar duties of a starter, and the Board of Control can get along without Mr. Caldwell's services, and if Mr. Caldwell does not have trouble in collecting his fat salary he will be lucky indeed.

There was a lively boxing entertainment in the gymnasium of the Manhattan Athletic Club last night, furnished by the Bank Clerks' Athletic Club, and the connished by the Bank Clerks' Athletic Club, and the contests were the finals in their boxing tournament, the preliminaries having been held last Wednesday. As the chaff had been weeded out, some lively sport was witnessed.
